YANKEE AND ITALIAN TARS ENJOY PICNIC

Thousands Visited Steeplechase Yesterday to See Jackies Play.

OFFICERS PAY SHORT VISIT

The reception given the crews of the United States Battleship Vermont and the Italian Cruiser Etruria, yesterday, at Steeplechase Island, was in every detail a complete success. The weather was excellent, the island was filled with Italians and Americans in honor of the occasion. There was plenty to eat and drink and the best of feeling was expressed by the two crews. At 9:30 in the evening some of the finest fireworks ever seen in the city were set off and witnessed by fully 3,000 men, women and children. This did not include the entire crowd

This did not include the entire crowd for many left before the fireworks were ignited.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon the officers of the Etruria landed on the Island and were received with refreshments at the scenic railway. They were then shown about the island, After they had been all over the resort they were taken to Lehmann's hotel where dinner was served. Some of where dinner was served. There was not a dull moment on the Island from wtart to finish. On the ball grounds games were being played all the afternnon. The shooting galleries were open and the hit-the-nigger-in-the-head-and-you-get-a - cigar place was going full blast. The scenic railway broke down only once and left two Italian jackies up in the air for a few minutes, but no harm was done. This attraction was probably the most a few minutes, but no harm was done. This attraction was probably the most popular on the island and some of the Italian officers indulged in the amusement. The dance hall and the skating rink were full of young people mostly sailors and girls. One sailor Owney Curley of the Vermont injured his right wrist by falling in the rink.

When the beer began to work some

When the beer began to work some funny sights were seen. Four sailors passing the small cage on the road where some small bears were formerly kept, mistook the cage for a monkey cage. The idea struck one of the boys cage. The idea struck one of the boys that he would like to be a monkey. Accordingly he crawled into the cage on all fours. He jumped into the branches of the tree inside the cage and squinted exactly like a monk. He then scratched himself like all monkeys do and look at the imaginary fleathing he did not get. From the tree keys do and look at the imaginary fleat which he did not get. From the tree he swung around the cage on a rope and squealed. This brought a large crowd about the cage and the performer drew a laugh. By this time another of the sailors got into the cage while the people outside threw peanuts and other things in to the would be monkeys. (Special from United Press.) Des Maines, Sept. 20.-In a straightfrom-the-shoulder speech on the steps of the state capitol to-day President Taft took up the "Big Stick" which had been laid down by his predecessor and brought it down on the shoulders of the railroads. By this action, unless all signs fail, Mr. Taft has reopened the war between the transpor opened the war between the transportation companies and the administration at Washington. He demands more law from Congress, demands more power for the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in the same breath accuses the railroads of the country of maintaining discriminatory rates, over capitalizing their lines and dealing in the securities of their competitors with only one possible result—the stifling of competition, the raising of rates and the oppression of the shipper.

Hats lead. suggests Means by Which the whole store joins.

Exhibit days are to be of fuller interest than ever they have been before. They are to give a more-direct glimpse into the approved-of-fashion things. They are to be authoriative. They are to be marked by the showing of more and handsomer things. They will bring forward the finest collection of direct-imported wares that ever Bridgeport has been given opportunity to view.

Gorgeous trimmings are to be used on the gowns of this season. Fresh from Paris, there is ready a gathering that is both large and beautiful. Unique jewelry is to be worn, jewelry that could spring to life only in the brain of a worker inspired by the treasures of the Old World and in touch with the newest adaptation by Fashion of those treasures. Here is such jewelry; bought in Paris by the store's representative and sent directly here. And these are but examples.

The exhibit days are to be notable. Hats will hold the center; to them belongs the place of honor. And rarely-beautiful they are. Almost so many sorts that they bewilder. Certainly, so many sorts that women of individual taste will be able to find what exactly suits that taste. Yes, it is to be a season of free choice. One may wear a hat that fits one's taste-and still be in fashion. There is no adhering to one set style. Instead, there is offered choice from many diverging styles. And that is as it should be; American women should not be bound to any one
